Grow your skills. Enhance your care.

Learn new techniques to respond to changed behaviours in people living with dementia.

Most of us have experienced a range of emotions over the last few weeks. In a short amount of time, we've been asked to change our lives dramatically in response to COVID-19.

The Centre for Dementia Learning is committed to supporting staff in aged care and the aged care industry. This month, we are offering free training to help workers respond to changed behaviours and problem-solve challenges.

At least half of all people living in residential aged care are living with dementia, with many estimating these numbers to be much greater.

These free courses can be completed in just one hour each and paused at any point. It's practical, straightforward and easy to work through including short videos and support to develop a personalised action plan that can be implemented straight away.

Sign up today to access two online courses free of charge until 30 June 2020. Find out more at the website below.
